What are other countries
doing to help Ukraine?

Let's look at the story

Following Russia's invasion of Ukraine, thousands of people have left their homes to reach areas where they think they will be safe. The United Nations have estimated that at least 100,000 people have already left their homes.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson said that the UK needed to do everything it could to help Ukraine's economy and support its government.

Thousands of people have already crossed into neighbouring countries including Romania, Moldova and Poland.

What's happening in Ukraine?

Ukraine and Russia have a lot of unsettled history. The two countries used to be part of the Soviet Union, from 1922-1991. Some Ukrainians want their country to have closer ties to the western countries, but others want it to have closer ties to Russia. Over the past few days, Russia have launched a wave of attacks on Ukraine with Russian forces launched a major military assault on Ukraine on Thursday morning.

How are Ukraine's neighbouring countries helping?

Countries who share a border with Ukraine have been preparing for the arrival of refugees. Maia Sandu, Moldova's president said she was prepared to help Ukrainian refugees. Slovakia, Hungary and Poland have also said they are ready to welcome refugees and are sending extra troops to manage people arriving at crossings set up on their borders with Ukraine.

How are the UK and wider world helping Ukraine?

Prime Minister Boris Johnson has announced sanctions to have a negative impact on the Russian economy and he's said that the UK was one of the first countries in Europe to send defensive weapons to help Ukraine.

There are many charities that are offering support including UNICEF, who are working across eastern Ukraine to deliver life-saving programmes for children. Sunflower of Peace is another charity who are helping paramedics and doctors, and have been fundraising for supplies, which include medical backpacks.
